

The Mumbai atelier that is a secret workshop for top French fashion

French couturier Julien Fournie is determined to put these craftsmen in the spotlight

Chetan Desai, director of Creations by Shanagar atelier, which is constructing a wedding dress for French couturier Julien Fournie to show at Paris Fashion Week. AFP

Glenda Kwek and Olga Nedbaeva
AFP
Jan 24, 2023

Listen In English Listen In Arabic

Beta V1.0 - Powered by automated translation

Sitting in a lotus position, four men weave glittering beads through gold thread on an organza sheet, carefully constructing a wedding dress that will soon wow crowds at Paris Fashion Week.

For once, the French couturier behind the design, Julien Fournie, is determined to put these craftsmen in the spotlight: his new collection, showing in Paris on Tuesday, is entirely made with fabrics from Mumbai.

He says a sort of "design imperialism" means that French fashion houses often play down the fact their fabrics are made outside France.

"The houses which don't admit it are perhaps afraid of losing their clientele," Fournie told AFP.

But that is absurd, he continued.

"India is number one in the world in embroidery. It's ancestral. They've been dressing maharajas in gold-embroidered outfits since the 16th century."

Fournie works with a company called Creations By Shanagar (meaning "to adorn" in Sanskrit), housed in a nondescript beige building near Mumbai's international airport.

Dozens of men in grey polo shirts sit cross-legged on cushions, heads bent over large sheaths of fabric. There is silence but for the clicking of needles and beads, the whirl of ceiling fans, and the occasional plane overhead.

Hand-embroidery done by craftsmen in a Mumbai atelier. AFP

'A lot of fantasy'

For decades, they have played an essential but unsung role in the fashion industries of Europe, Japan and the US.

"I like working with Julien because he is another master craftsman who knows his subject very well," said Chetan Desai, director of Creations by Shanagar, 55.

"He has a lot of fantasy. He comes up with his own concepts and I have to translate those ideas into embroidery.

"It has been a very challenging experience and at the same time, it has been very fruitful," he added.

Back in France, Fournie sends the compliments back.

"What they know how to do better than anyone is to embroider with degraded gold thread, passing it through transparent beads to create colour gradients. It's unprecedented," he said.

It gives silk an aged, elegant look for wedding dresses that "shine, but not too much".

"Haute couture customers don't want to look like a Christmas tree," he added.

"I've worked with great French embroiderers and each time it's complicated. Everyone wants to put in their own ideas and you never get exactly what you want."

Chetan Desai, director of Creations by Shanagar, shows a sample of the atelier's work. AFP

Star clients

Desai's father set up Creations By Shanagar in the 1960s as a workshop for hand-loomed and embroidered saris.

In the 1990s, Desai looked further afield to France, partnering with Franco-Tunisian designer Azzedine Alaïa on dresses that ultimately graced the likes of Naomi Campbell.

He does not divulge the current clients on his books but his past roster gives a sense of the high demand. They include Jean Paul Gaultier, Yohji Yamamoto and Donna Karan.

Even Hollywood came knocking, with Shanagar helping design Nicole Kidman's costumes for the 2001 hit Moulin Rouge!.

The atelier attracts workers from across India, such as Biswajit Patra, 31, who has been working here since he was 16.

"I learnt the trade in my village near Kolkata because my father was doing the same job and my brother and sister are also doing this job," he said.

READ MORE
Brunello Cucinelli's intellectual approach to fashion

Among their unique ideas is a way of rolling up pieces of tulle to make embroidered flowers.

"They have a range of techniques that we don't have here," said Jean Paul Cauvin, director of Fournie's house in France.

One of the most delicate jobs is preparing the fabric once it arrives from India and heads for the workshop where it will be assembled into the dresses.

It is Fournie himself who irons out the fabric.

"Sixty per cent of haute couture is ironing," he said with a smile.

Updated: January 24, 2023, 17:02

Kia Sportage.

317€

Découvrez-le

EDITOR'S PICKS

UAE can count on French support for Cop28 success, France's minister

ECONOMY

Yemen official hopeful Saudi-Houthi talks will bring about

MENA

Emirates test flight powered by sustainable fuel

AVIATION

Rishi Sunak's first 100 days: Has he met his promises to steady UK ship?

UK

Dyche swoops in to save Everton's disastrous season

FOOTBALL

Kia Sportage.

317€

Découvrez-le

MORE FROM THE NATIONAL

Loewe to unveil its latest collection with Studio Ghibli

LUXURY

Who is Sabato De Sarno, Gucci's new creative director?

FASHION

Indian designer Gaurav Gupta makes Paris haute couture debut

FASHION

New trailer offers first glimpse of Gigi Hadid presenting Netflix's Next in Fashion

FASHION